Camps creatively relied on technology this summer as when other animals tend to stand in the shade.

With technology is horseback riding, and the they ride.

That have been filmed and posted to the internet.

Experience when camp is in session.

Just as Mentone has a long history with the presence of its summer camps,
the history of camp horses is rich, as well.

Since the advent of horse programs at Mentone’s camps, camp horses have been leased to various camps by a small number of local families who care for the horses during the fall, winter, and spring, and then transport them to camps where they live (and work) during the summer.

Hardy Jones and Dewey Smith were likely the first to lease horses to camps in Mentone. Their passion has now been shared by several generations of family members.

Hardy Jones furnished horses to Camp DeSoto.
When he passed on, his son, Ed Jones, took up the reins, so to speak, and leased to Camp DeSoto, Lookout Mountain Camp for Boys, and Camp Laney,

Enjoying the freedom of being at pasture—while likely also missing the stimulation and interaction they experience when camp is in session.

Dewey Smith leased to Camp Skyline, where he met his wife, Nancy, when she was a counselor there.
After their marriage, the couple leased to Camp
Skyline and Alpine Camp for Boys. After his death,
Nancy partnered with Ed’s daughter, Trish Jones
Martin, to lease to Camp Skyline until Nancy’s death in 2017. Nancy and Dewey’s son, Larry, had helped Nancy train their horses and get them ready for camp until his passing, and now his children carry on the tradition, with Josh Smith and his wife, Emmy, leasing to Lookout Mountain Camp and Camp
Hidden Hollow in Chickamauga, GA, and Justin
Smith and his wife, Lashaye, leasing to Barnsley
Resort in Adairsville, GA. Lashaye and Trish Martin

Mentone Matters • by Mayor Rob Hammond

Recently, I was able to paint a plank at the MERF House for the Pathway to Community project. I am not very artistic. However, Jan Wilkinson had outlined several planks. I chose one of hers with Snoopy on it to paint. It was a really fun experience! For those of you who are creative and artistic, you can create your own plank. If you are like me, Jan has planks outlined and ready to paint! Contact Sarah Wilcox at 256-635-8193 to set up a time.

Sales tax revenues are off nearly 50% for April, May, and June 2020, when compared to the same months in 2019. Mentone recently received $38,000 from the state’s Coronavirus Relief Fund Reimbursement, which will help offset loss of revenue.

To protect lives and livelihoods, please wear a facemask when in public places. Continue to wash hands and physically distance. Right now, these are the best tools we have in slowing the spread of the virus.

I was recently chatting with a Groundhog reader and she said, “Opening a Groundhog is like walking into a candy store.” What a fun analogy! The paper has now been in publication for 38 years. Through these years, countless tales have been told of both our area’s history and current news. I would liken it to a tapestry, with interwoven threads that, together, show a picture of a vibrant community and its many fascinating people.

I really enjoyed learning about and writing a brief history of Mentone’s camp horses for this issue’s cover story. I was a horse rider when I was a girl and can certainly attest to the power horses have in helping develop confidence and connection. Isn’t it wonderful that, over the years, thousands of campers’ lives have been touched by these magnificent, sensitive creatures, while surrounded by the beauty of Mentone? I feel deep gratitude for the many people who have made this possible over these many decades.

This current issue reflects the voices of many contributors who are each carrying on the tradition of providing a snapshot of life in Mentone and its surrounding areas, offering somewhat of a respite from the trials of today’s world. As I write this, I sit at the window looking onto our front porch and yard. I hear a woodpecker in the trees overhead. I see another bird on the porch, hopping from flower basket to wind chimes to hanging candle holder, searching for breakfast. A deer and fawn quietly hold their heads to the grass further out in the field, in their peaceful, attentive way. As the world struggles with “worldly” challenges, I enjoy the simplicity of these fleeting moments, witnessing the beings of nature as they go about their own business of survival.

Honestly, I get that “candy store” feeling every time I make the effort to drive to the brow to watch a sunset, which I try to do often during these long days of summer light. It’s always unpredictable…always a surprise. Sometimes the lingering light will simply fade away, and sometimes it will evolve into an explosion of color and texture, even after the sun has already dipped below the horizon of Sand Mountain.

Community and nature are like powerful portals into the remembrance of what is right and good in this world. We are so fortunate to have both in such great abundance.

Be well. —Kelly
I’m not sure if you have already heard, but I am sorry to have to break the news: there will be no Colorfest this year due to the ongoing pandemic and recent spike in infection rates. The MAPA Board, without the need for much discussion or debate, strongly believes that it would be highly irresponsible to try and go forward with the festival this October under current circumstances (planning and coordination with vendors, suppliers, transportation facilities, the town, local merchants, etc. takes several months advance planning and work, primarily by our fabulous festival coordinator, Sharon Habin). I, personally, will really miss spending that weekend as Sharon’s “gopher,” helping host the MAPA booth, and having the opportunity to meet and talk with all of the vendors and patrons, both local and those from out-of-town. Let’s make sure we double up on the fun next spring at the Rhododendrun Festival! We are tentatively planning on holding the annual meeting of MAPA members sometime in either December or January, and will continue doing that in the future. We will provide plenty of up front notice of

Municipal Elections August 25 by Jay Robbins

Voters across Alabama go to the polls on August 25 to cast their ballots for the various officials in the city or town where they live. Polling places will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

In situations where only one person is running for a specific position, no election is held; rather, the lone qualifier automatically assumes that office when the new municipal quadrennium officially begins (on the first Monday in November). In Hammondville, for example, there will be no election because there is only one qualifier for the position of mayor and for each of the five places on the town council. It’s a different story in Valley Head. An election is necessary because two people are vying to be mayor, and there are two qualifiers each for Places One and Five on the town council. In Mentone, the candidates for mayor and for four of the five places on the town council (all incumbents) are running unopposed, but Mentonians will get to decide between J.D. Trammel and David Allgood for Place Two on election day.

COVID-19 is still with us, of course, and all poll workers will wear gloves and masks (or face shields). Residents may vote by absentee ballot in August’s municipal election, if there is a concern of voting in person due to COVID-19. If you are resident within the town limits of Mentone or Valley Head, contact your town clerk to learn how to get your absentee ballot:

- Kristen Emory, Mentone Town Hall, 256-634-4444
- Debra Rhodes, Valley Head Town Hall, 256-635-6814

The virus is also responsible for declining sales tax revenues in communities all over Alabama. Monies from the CARES Act passed recently by Congress have trickled down and are helping out our communities, but each of us can help the town we live in by purchasing supplies and gas locally.

Moon Lake School Makes Plans to Reopen by Kelly Leavitt

When students return to their classrooms at Moon Lake School in Mentone, it will be after an unprecedented break of almost five months. Students have been given the option of returning to in-class instruction or enrolling in DeKalb County’s Virtual Academy. Certain precautions are being taken at school to help keep the students and teachers healthy.

As students enter their school bus in the mornings, their temperature will be taken. If they have a fever, they will not be allowed at school. “We are relying heavily on parents to not send their children to school if they are sick,” said principal Mary Lance. “Students who become ill at school will need to be isolated in a special area until their parents come to pick them up.”

Students in grades 3 through 6 will each receive a Chromebook which they will take home with home at the end of each school day. Mrs. Lance explained that “if school does not for some reason resume the next day, by mandate of the state or

Updates About In-person Healthcare Visits by Lynn Hixon

As our communities continue to re-open, you may have questions about when to resume in-person visits with your healthcare providers, and what to expect during a visit. Always check with your physician to see what is best for your healthcare needs. These are some helpful considerations for your IN-PERSON visits:

- Don't put off necessary care or check-ups, especially if it's urgent or may lead to complications, such as heart attack or stroke.
- Continue preventive care such as immunizations and cancer screenings.
- Providers and facilities will minimize exposure, so you may experience some changes during your visit:
  - Wait in your vehicle until the start of the visit.
  - Use a limited entrance, if possible.
  - Be screened for COVID-19, including having your temperature checked.
  - Avoid waiting rooms and common areas.
  - Maintain social distancing.
  - Wear a face covering. One will be provided to you if you don't have your own.

If you have any questions or concerns, please call Lynn Hixon at the DeKalb County Council on Aging at 256-845-8590.

A s an environmental advocate, there is nothing else on this earth I would rather do than to educate others about how they can become good stewards of the environment. You don’t have to take extreme measures and chain yourself to a tree in order to be an environmental advocate. It is simply caring enough about the land and making good decisions based on the natural world. Education is vital to ensuring positive change and is our greatest tool as an organization. I can talk to landowners for hours, literally, about how to protect Little River by simply keeping their creekbanks and riverbanks intact. I love to visit properties of members from the river community and point out native plants on their property and give tips on plants that are tolerant and thrive in this area.

I feel very fortunate to do this work and I enjoy connecting with others in the community for a common goal. Our small organization has a hand in several projects and depends on grants and donations from individuals that align with our mission in order to protect Little River from degradation. In March (pre-COVID-19), the organization was gearing up for a great season full of guided trips on Little River, fundraising events, and implementation of programs through our grant agreements. By May, most grantors halted or postponed funding and we were forced to cancel events until further notice, making the future of LRWK shaky and uncertain. One thing IS certain. Little River Waterkeeper has not ceased to work protecting Little River! Here is what has been going on.

In March and April, the staff of Little River Waterkeeper worked together in order to complete scheduled litter cleanups on Little River and the Fort Payne Drinking Water Reservoir. We built and installed monofilament line recycling tubes and placed bilingual “Please Do Not Litter” signs within the two watersheds.

In May, we kicked off our fifth year of SwimGuide. We test seven areas of Little River each week, Memorial Day through Labor Day. This important work informs users about the water quality in Little River and allows our organization to monitor the overall health of the watershed. Check out weekly data at littleriverwaterkeeper.org and click the Swim Guide 2020 tab.

We continue working on the Keep Little River Wild campaign, a positive campaign to protect Little River in its entirety. You can read more about our efforts at KeepLittleRiverWild.org. It is probably one of the most important projects we can accomplish as an organization. Please sign the petition while you are on the site!

Daily tasks of the Little River Waterkeeper include responding to citizen concerns, educating land owners about how to prevent degradation, and patrolling the watershed for issues. The organization is also expanding work into mapping industrial farming impacts in the watershed.

I invite you to check out our website at littleriverwaterkeeper.org and consider becoming a member or making a monetary donation to support our work. All donations are tax deductible. If you would like to show us your river property or have an area of concern, please call and schedule a site visit. Call 256-634-8370 or email angie@littleriverwaterkeeper.org.

Angie Shugart is the executive director of Little River Waterkeeper, a 501(c)(3) water advocacy program and a member of the international Waterkeepers Alliance.

MACC Plans to Open Center to Visitors, Artists, and Limited Programming by Randy Grider

The Mentone Arts & Cultural Center (MACC) is working hard to open as soon possible at its new home in downtown Mentone. MACC purchased the former Kamama building from the Town of Mentone. The organization closed on the property at 5951 Alabama Highway 117 on June 29.

MACC leaders hope to open a visitors information area for tourists to pick up brochures within the next few weeks. Due to the coronavirus, visitors must wear masks and access will be limited to the front area until the surge in cases decreases significantly.

The organization plans to have artist booths ready to sell artwork and antiques this fall. The focus will be showcasing local and regional artists. It has put together an advisory team to assist with artists’ requests for displaying/selling their artwork and the gallery setup.

MACC also is scheduling limited programming for the immediate future. Scheduled classes include a photography workshop taught by master photographer John Dershham, Sept. 18-19 (limit of 10 persons, $135) and a rescheduled watercolor in drybrush class by instructor Alan R. Young Oct. 2-4 (one spot available, $135). Other classes/workshops were being finalized at presstime.

For more information on displaying and selling artwork or reservations for a class/workshop, please see contact information below.

All programs and events are scheduled with health department social distancing requirements or person limits set by instructors for classes and workshops. All are subject to change as circumstances develop with the current health situation.

Please follow us on our Facebook page for updates.

In its agreement with the Town of Mentone, elections for the next 50 years and council meetings for the foreseeable future are being held at MACC facility. MACC also has leased the restaurant to Kevin Dunlap, owner of Elevation Bistro and Catering Company, LLC.

“This is great news for people who live here and visitors alike,” said MACC president Ben Shurett. “People who love art and entertainment will have many more options and we will be very supportive of local artists. The Town of Mentone will have a place to vote and meet that is much larger than previously in Town Hall and we’re so pleased to have another terrific dining option. Perhaps most importantly, the building will be alive again with activities and programming and everyone should be able to feed off that energy.”

In addition to its many donors, MACC’s support network includes partnerships with various organizations across the state including Northeast Alabama Community College, Alabama State Council on the Arts, Community Foundation of Northeast Alabama, Daniel Foundation of Birmingham, Alabama Mountain Lakes Tourist Association, DeKalb Tourism, DeKalb County Community Development Commission, DeKalb County Economic Development Authority, and others.

MACC has already started networking with instructors from the renowned John C. Campbell Folk School in Brasstown, N.C., to create a visiting artist/instructor program. MACC continues to talk to other local and visiting artists/instructors who are interested in teaching here. MACC welcomes any local artist who is interested in teaching classes and workshops to get in touch with us.

When fully operational, classes and workshops at the building will include arts-related programs in the following disciplines utilizing local and visiting artists: painting/drawing, culinary arts, pottery, photography, ceramics, woodworking, quilting, music, poetry, storytelling, music, songwriting, acting/community theater. Some programming will be held at off-site locations when applicable.

The building will be dedicated in memory of a late family member of MACC’s two earliest supporters, Dr. Charles O. “Soc” and Barbara Sennett, of Rome, GA. The Sennetts are well respected throughout the area and have long maintained a second home in Mentone. “We are so pleased that the building will be named in memory of the Sennett’s beloved son, Charles O. “Chuck” Sennett,” Shurett said. The date and time of the dedication is yet to be determined. Please look for updates on our Facebook page.

MACC will honor other donors and supporters during the following months in various locations throughout the center. More details on those honorees will be announced as those areas bearing their names become operational.

The original plan was to construct a building just beyond Moon Lake Library on Alabama Highway 117, but with the pandemic and economic slowdown, MACC leadership saw the need to quickly adapt its plan in the face of the uncertainty both conditions presented.

“When this existing building became available, it was perfect for our needs and allows us to open and begin programming almost immediately,” Shurett said. “We are confident MACC programming will bring many people to our area and be a real boost to the local economy.”

Wow! The MERF house has not slowed down this summer! Many have scheduled time to make their mark and to paint pickets with solid colors and designs. There is still time to get involved and paint a picket for our Pathway to Community project. If interested, head to littleriverartscouncil.org/pickets to submit a request for a painting time. An email will be sent with availability and your timely response would be appreciated. Your painting time will be a two-hour slot with a limited number of attendees. There are some pickets with a sketched design to follow for artists needing a bit of support. Masks will be used, and social distancing will be respected. Follow MERF’s Pathway to Community page on Facebook to see all the fun designs being created by our community!

Be on the lookout for the outdoor musical instruments gracing the walkway soon!

Creativity has not only been happening at the MERF house but also next door in Ms. Paula’s art room. MERF provided the funding for Ms. Paula to attend a virtual professional development workshop by the Alabama Arts Alliance. SAIL (Sustaining Artful Instruction and Learning) 2020 was a multi-disciplinary art making virtual event. The teachers explored Alabama geology, geography, rivers, flora, and fauna through music, dance, poetry, bookmaking, printing paper, painting, and more. Ms. Paula loved dreaming about what she could bring to her Moon Lake Elementary School students as she drew dirt, studied the Cahaba river, and learned about the endangered, red bellied turtle. I cannot wait to see what our creative students will experience and create!

In case that is not enough action, the MERF house is finally getting a face lift with some needed renovation work! Looking forward to having a beautiful exterior with a covered ramp and new side entrance along with the new Pathway to Community. #leavemeinmenteone

FORGOTTEN SOUTHERN GESTURES
by Larry Smalley

I am proud to live in the South. Proud to be from Alabama and very proud to live in Mentone. Southern people have an attitude worth catching. We are very responsible to others and love our mothers dearly. If you want to feel the wrath of the South, just say something about our mommas.

We have always had or made certain gestures that you only see in the South. I remember not too many years ago, when you were driving and met a car you would raise your index finger from the wheel just to say hi. We have all but stopped that and it is such a pity. Instead of looking at folks, now we are too immersed in texting or calling and never notice who we are meeting. Even when we are walking, we keep our heads down or on the phone.

I have also noticed the impatience of people stopped for a funeral procession. Really? Have we gotten so busy that we can’t give a few minutes to honor the ones that go before us?

The first time I pulled over with my Northern daughter-in-law, who I love dearly, she asked why you wouldn’t stop for someone you don’t even know. My answer was quick and to the point. I told her we still have respect in the South for our people.

Please don’t let this culture die. When you are driving, look around you at what was created with you in mind. He (God) knew us long before we knew him and the least we can do is enjoy what he has given, and enjoy the people we come in contact with. One day when our light is closing in, let’s not ask ourselves what all we missed in our life because we were too busy worrying about things that never really mattered any way.

So if I see you on the road, I will always raise a finger and I hope I never meet a hearse carrying you or a loved one, but if I do, you can bet I will gladly pull over to pay my respects as it passes by.

Cloudmont Camp for Boys, which became Saddlerock Camp, and is now Riverview Camp for Girls, for which Ed Jones's son, Ronnie Jones, and his wife, Gail, now furnish horses and where Gail serves as head of the equestrian program. Jack also began Valley View Ranch in Cloudland, GA, which was originally a camp for boys but soon became Valley View Ranch Equestrian Camp for Girls, which Jack’s daughters attended and where, through the years, they continued to develop the riding programs. The camp is currently owned and directed by Jack’s daughter, Nancy Jones. Her sister Janis Jones Carrier’s daughter, Chelsea Manning, is assistant director, and her sister Marsha Jones Hair’s son, Doug, Jr., serves as the farm manager.

“A camp horse is special,” said Trish Martin. “They must have a big heart, they must have a lot of tolerance, and they must have drive. A lot of horses can start out being good horses, but they get burned out, just like people do. At that point you have to find them a different choice. If they get tired of the ring, they might need to go on to the trail. Like people, their feelings have to be considered. If you want a safe horse, you have to have a happy horse.”

“A camp horse is not about a breed,” said Trish, whose horses have included Appaloosas, quarter horses, walking horses, Rocky Mountain gaited horses, and paint horses. “A camp horse might be a registered, high-dollar horse no longer wanted by its owner. Or it can be your typical plow horse, what we call grade horses, that are not registered. It’s all about their ability to give a child the confidence they need to become a horseperson, and their ability for us to put trust in them and feel a confidence in them to be able to turn a child loose on them.”

“That comes with a lot of experience,” Trish continued, “a lot of horse knowledge—what we call horse sense, being able to know what a horse is typically going to do. You never know. They’re 1,000-pound animals. You’re always surprised. That’s why we have stringent safety protocols in place. There is no room to not be cautious and safe with these animals. But camp horses are the type of animals that you can take from the pasture, ride for a few weeks, and then send them to camp, where they’ll take care of the children. My philosophy is, ‘Those kids are my kids.’ If I wouldn’t put my own child on a horse, I won’t put somebody else’s child on that horse.”

BOOK REVIEW
by Anne McLeod
This Is Where You Belong: The Art and Science of Loving the Place You Live
by Melody Warnick (Viking, 2016)

Americans move an average of 11.7 times in their lifetimes, according to Melody Warnick, author of This Is Where You Belong. We are footloose people, some of us more so than others. As her family moved from Austin, TX, to Blacksburg, VA (post-college move #6 for Warnick), she recognized a need for her young family to develop roots and a sense of place attachment, a loyalty to home that would let them settle down at last.

Warnick discusses research about what makes people develop that kind of loyalty and developed specific steps she could take to help her feel better about her latest hometown, a place she found, at least initially, a bit nondescript. She identified ten things home that would let them settle down at last. For each of the ten things on the list, Warnick developed specific activities and did her best to implement some herself. These “Love Where You Live Experiments” sometimes created awkward moments, such as their forced attempts to become “regulars” at a local cafe. But others, such as taking a batch of banana muffins to their neighbor on Good Neighbor Day, did help break the ice and establish a connection.

Reading This Is Where You Belong reminded me of just how many of Warnick’s action items are normal everyday activities for people in our community. I’ve been on walks recently in my neighborhood and never reached the end of my block because I run into neighbors and stop for extended, socially distanced chats. Two hours later I head home, up to speed on local politics, real estate, and everything else Mentone. Our takeout treats are from the local restaurants we love. We’re also blessed with opportunities for volunteer work, such as the Pathway to Community project taking shape on the east side of Mentone at the MERF walking track. And our fun stuff and nature exploration includes canoe trips on Little River every chance we get.

In the penultimate chapter of the book, “Stay Loyal,” Warnick discusses the poignant legacy of the 2007 mass shooting at Virginia Tech in Blacksburg, VA, reminding us that no community is immune to Bad Things happening. She offers as examples Hurricane Katrina, Chernobyl, tsunamis, tornados, but also long-term stressors such as racial and class tensions, public health issues, and economic downturns. This chapter resonated with me, as I read it with the coronavirus pandemic upending life around the world, not just in our small town. Warnick’s research was an important reminder that the shared experience of going through hard times together instills empathy and inspires actions that build a stronger community.

This Is Where You Belong, with its practical steps to help readers develop positive connections to their hometowns, is a good read for anyone thinking about home and creative placemaking. It is available for check out from the Moon Lake Community Library.

Last year, Trish had to euthanize three of her horses, ranging in age from their mid-30s to early 40s. “My husband made the comment that it would be amazing to know how many children have ridden these horses over the years.”

“They’re special animals,” said Trish. “But they have to be groomed that way, and they have to be cared for.” Ed and Trish have always bought young horses and groomed them into camp horses. Trish likes her horses to be older than five years before becoming camp horses.

Caring for camp horses is a process. In early spring, those who lease horses transition their feed from grass to grain, get them shod, and start riding them. Throughout the year, they make sure the horses’ veterinary needs are met, and they make sure they have grass and hay. “And of course,” said Trish, “when you put up hay, you need hay equipment. It’s a business. People should not do this for the income. It’s more for the love—the love for both the animals and for the kids.”

Trish plans to lease 50 horses to camps next year. “With me, it’s a way of life because of the fact that my grandfather and my father and brother and myself have all been involved through the generations. My sister, Amanda Shirey, used to teach riding lessons on her farm. Ronnie and Gail’s daughter, Jessica Jones [who many know as a small animal veterinarian in Fort Payne], has the same history that every other than 10 years ago, the camp developed a specialized equestrian program. More than 10 years ago, the camp developed a specialized equestrian program for the girls who loved riding more or barns to be cleaner,” said Trish.

As you drive around the Mentone area and enjoy the view of green pastures with horses freely roaming, they may just be camp horses. And the story behind each of these horses is that they have played an important role in influencing children through building confidence, new skills, and connection with large creatures, while having a comfortable and happy experience. Often, campers who may be frightened by the horses at the start of camp eventually become enamored by them.

The work of the families responsible for caring for these horses clearly pays off in droves. The history of the campers’,” Trish recalled.

Any discussion of Mentone’s camp horses would be incomplete without mention of L.M. Flannigan, a special man who had a deep love for horses. He passed away at age 75 in 2008, but is still considered by many, as Trish said, to have been “one of the most well-loved men on this mountain. He always had a table to sit at.” L.M. worked at the stables at various local camps, working with the horses, brushing them, and cleaning stalls. “You couldn’t have asked for animals to be loved any more or barns to be cleaner,” said Trish.

“The horses L.M. cared for were a real source of pride for him,” said Rob Hammond, owner and director of Camp Laney. “He’d look at me sometimes and say, ‘Now Rob, you know I take really good care of my horses.’ I’d laugh and say, ‘I know you do, L.M.’”

L.M. was a seasoned rider, as well, and enjoyed off-season trail rides. He accompanied Ronnie and Ed Jones on several annual eight-day “Alabama Wagon Trains” from Boaz to Montgomery—about 165 miles. “He was a big part of the horses’ lives, and the campers,” Trish recalled.

As you drive around the Mentone area and enjoy the view of green pastures with horses freely roaming, they may just be camp horses. And the story behind each of these horses is that they have played an important role in influencing children through building confidence, new skills, and connection with large creatures, while having a comfortable and happy experience. Often, campers who may be frightened by the horses at the start of camp eventually become enamored by them.

The work of the families responsible for caring for these horses clearly pays off in droves. The history of this calling is part of this mountain’s history. As Trish said, “It’s not just one of us, it’s all of us.”

It’s unfortunate that spectators weren’t allowed at our sidewalk chalk art contest on June 27 on MERF’s walking trail. It was one of the small sacrifices we’ve all had to make during the pandemic. Artists of all ages were invited to make chalk art in open air—and some remarkable art arose from the asphalt! We had ten entries, with a total of 27 artists participating. The public was invited to engage by voting online for various categories and prizes were given to all the participants. It was such a fun day that we’re planning on this being an annual (or bi-annual) event. Visit littleriverartscouncil.org to see all the entries and a video (with drone footage) showing the progression of the artwork. Thanks to all who participated (including those who voted!).

A small group of scouts sit in a semi-circle beneath a sweltering mid-afternoon sun, listening to a lecture on Search and Rescue in the Outdoor Skills area of the Boy Scout of America’s (BSA) Hugh M. Comer Scout Reservation in Mentone. The scouts sit six feet apart and wear facemasks. Still the scene is a precious respite during a period of crisis that has touched even the most remote of woodland camps like Comer.

“I’m really enjoying camp,” says Star Scout Billy Dainty of Tampa, FL, with an unmistakable smile hidden beneath his mask. “It’s not really as different as I expected before I got here.” This is his first time at Comer and second time spent at a summer camp. He is one of many new faces from all over the Southeast at Camp Comer, the only BSA camp open in north Alabama.

This summer, when moving around camp, there is a noticeable pressure to business here.

On the winding road leading into camp, a grey truck sits idling in the rain as a caravan of cars comes to a stop near the check-in station. “Pretty simple for our check-in process,” says Asher Kervin, Comer’s camp medic. He is the first to see the troops as they arrive at camp. “Every scout must have a waiver which says they haven’t travelled to certain places, haven’t been around with people with symptoms, or had a positive COVID-19 test. If they don’t have a waiver, they can’t come to camp. We also do temperature checks, and if one of the scouts shows a high temperature, the entire troop is turned around and sent home.”

The medic’s aide, John Ford, a long beard poking out beneath a green mask, goes from window to window with a small infrared thermometer, checking each temple and forehead. “A lot of people don’t have a waiver, they can’t come to camp. We also do temperature checks, and if one of the scouts shows a high temperature, the entire troop is turned around and sent home.”

The medic’s aide, John Ford, a long beard poking out beneath a green mask, goes from window to window with a small infrared thermometer, checking each temple and forehead. “A lot of people are just really glad to be outside to be out of their houses,” he says.

Each of the troops passing underneath the iconic arrowhead arch benefits from months of preparation, checking, and planning—more than any other year in living memory. The staff prepared with an obvious heightened focus on health and safety during training week. The camp was open for only three weeks this year, and 300 Scouts (half the normal population) were allowed per week.

No assemblies were held on the parade field, nor meals with other troops in the dining hall; masks were required indoors and in key areas, and social distancing was maintained for the whole of camp. Shared resources like bathrooms and showers were extensively cleaned and sanitized, as well as things like climbing gear, shooting sports gear, computers, and the teaching spaces themselves. “Through discussions with health officials, review of CDC and state guidelines, and recommendations, we came to the decision to open camp with our executive board,” said Seth Hill, director of Camp Comer and director of camping for the Greater Alabama Council. “We felt we could offer a long-term camping experience for our youth that was safe and followed the recommended practices.” This decision to open camp made it one of only two BSA camps in Alabama to offer programming this summer.

The experience of running a camp in the age of COVID-19 came with challenges and difficulties, such as longer staff hours, and more intensive work. “It has been challenging to say the least,” Seth continued. “There is always the worry of a case arising and the fear of the current affairs surrounding us. However, I have been pleased by how the staff and campers have adapted to help ensure the quality delivery of an outstanding program here at Comer Scout Reservation.”

Was it worth opening up camp at all in the end? “We felt that youth needed a return to normalcy and that the camping experience could help foster that return; however, there was also great apprehension,” Seth said. “Many camps chose not to open this summer, and none should be faulted for their precaution. In the case of operating and planning for operations, you always consider the worst-case scenarios, and that was certainly in our mind. However, with the plans put in place, we felt confident in mitigating those scenarios.”

So, atop Lookout Mountain, Comer finished her 55th summer as one of a handful of camps to be open in 2020. Workers and participants alike collaborated to return a small amount of routine and tradition to a year of profound change. “I personally am grateful that we as a camp were able to offer a summer camp experience this summer,” said Seth. “To hear the laughter of Scouts, to see them discover new things, and gain knowledge and leadership is always an incredible thing. I am so happy that again this summer, that was possible.”

The Groundhog 19
Did you know that that art and other creative activities have been proven to reduce stress? Our innate ability to be creative can really help us cope during “This Time.” Girija Kaimal, assistant professor of creative arts therapies at Drexel University, led a study examining the effects of making art on stress-related hormones in the body. The results, published in Art Therapy: Journal of the American Art Therapy Association, found that just 45 minutes of creative activity lessens stress in the body significantly, regardless of artistic experience or talent.

As an Artist-in-Residence at UAB’s Institute for Arts in Medicine, I am a huge proponent of the healing power of art. I’ve seen the calming effect firsthand and have experienced it personally, as well. In my role at the Institute for Arts in Medicine, I love crafts (I am addicted to Pinterest) and I also love coloring pages, which I often hand out at the hospital. I’m particularly inspired by the creation of something out of nothing, such as creating an abstract sculpture with the Amazon boxes piling up in your garage. I suggest simple, fun, creative, projects where the process is more important than the product. I’d also encourage you to use materials you already have. Now is the time to cut up those old National Geographics and make art.

I recently led a virtual workshop for UAB’s Mental Health Ambassadors about the power of doodling. We drew simple lines, creating flower designs. Once we filled a whole page with doodles, we selected three, drew them on a folded piece of paper, and wrote a letter to a friend or loved one. Sometimes writing a letter can feel daunting, so I suggest you begin by describing where you are sitting, what you are doing; approach it like a friend just stopped by. I feel this simple intimate conversation on a hand-drawn card is an easy creative activity—and you are reaching out to someone at the same time. You have done two things to enhance your mental health...creative expression and reaching out to someone. You just might get a letter in return.

I’ve noticed over the last few months that I sometimes have less energy and my mind can get a bit foggy. Researchers at the University of Florida Center for Arts in Medicine say we are experiencing a collective trauma, with life’s usual stresses becoming prolonged; they are taking their toll on many. These researchers suggest that what we really need is “response art.” According to art therapist Barbara J. Fish, “This is the art that is created to contain difficult material and to express and examine their experiences.” I interpret this concept for myself as an artist as working out my own struggles in a creative way. For example, I have repaired a garden that was cut down by the power company. This physical work, and creating beauty out of devastation, has been incredibly healing. I also created a sculpture (a garden goddess named Grace) out of the broken vines and branches left behind from the clearing. These creative endeavors were my own personal response to the fear and isolation stresses of the pandemic.

I hope during the “This Time”—the pandemic, the racial unrest, the economic insecurity, the isolation and separation from loved ones, and the loss of lives—you will find the healing power of art.

Helene Taylor is an artist and part-time Mentone resident. For more suggestions on creative activities, you may contact her at hbtaylor@uab.edu and she will send you some creative prompts at no charge.
