Andrea Brandon: Lookout Mountain Art and Soul

By L. C. Moon

Andrea Brandon says her passion for art is like blood in her veins. “If I couldn't do it I would probably die. It keeps me going. The more I paint the more I am in love with painting.”

I asked Andrea when she first discovered her love of art and she responded, “As soon as I was able to hold a crayon.” Andrea originally taught herself by copying drawings from cartoon books and said she carried around Child Craft Encyclopedias like a Bible. All her techniques are strictly self-taught. At the age of 4 years old she sold her very first work of art to one of her mother's friends.

Andrea traded in her crayons for paint and as a result for over 20 years she has been selling paintings, becoming known by art collectors across the United States and in Europe. Her most prestigious rewards, and one of her most validating moments, was being asked to create an ornament for the White House Archives to commemorate the Russell Cave National Monument and as a result enjoyed a visit to the White house for its induction.

Much of Andrea's inspiration to paint comes from seeing beauty and her desire to express it, especially nature scenes. She feels strongly she is a part of nature and believes her Native American heritage helps her create authenticity in her work. She says her original inspiration to be an artist is largely because she is “from a family of artsy folks,” all of which are native to Lookout Mountain. Andrea reflected on the great artists of her family such as her great grandmother Mary Goodrich who was a wonderful seamstress. She also reflected on her “Crow lineage” including, but not limited to, rock masons who helped construct the original rock wall leading to Mentone on Hwy. 117 and Fanny Jane Crow who crocheted, often cleverly using bread sacks as replacement for her yarn.

Andrea's paintings reflect the beauty, art, heart and soul of the southern Appalachians. She has a sharp eye for the character and details. Her art captures the essence of nature and mountain living. It reflects the charm of simple life. Often I succumb with awe to the overwhelming beauty around me on Lookout Mountain and many times I feel like I am living or dreaming within an Andrea Brandon painting, whether looking upon the river, pastures, barns, cabins, creeks and/or the skyline.

Andrea's style is uniquely her own and made even more so because as she says, “I utilize what is available creating paintings on canvas, vases, bottles, wood, gourds, rocks or whatever I can find.” Andrea also utilizes a unique style by not only using traditional paintbrushes but also paintbrushes made from her own hair. She loves using her fingers to paint. She said, “I feel more a part of the painting when I use my fingers. It is like the paint moves my hand and helps me reveal what is already there.”

Andrea said she often has literally 150 projects going on at once. The biggest hurdle of being an artist has been being so inspired she needs more things to paint on even as creative as she is with mediums. Her husband Terry Brandon learned quickly that a life with Andrea meant that the dining room table and coffee table would forever be for art projects only. To her kids and Terry's (cont'd on page 4)
Mentone Matters
By Mayor Rob Hammond

February brought two snow storms and a tornado warning. There are many people I would like to thank for their work during the snow events. Our police officers were out constantly monitoring AL 117 and working with ALDOT and our volunteer firemen in keeping traffic safely moving. ALDOT treated 117 several times and brought scrapers out. The town contracted for snow removal on some other streets in Mentone. When road conditions were at their worst, our firemen led traffic up and down the mountain. With the threat of ice looming, Sand Mountain Co-op prepositioned men and equipment at Mentone. The crewmen spent the night at town hall. In response to the tornado warning, Chief Lamar Bray, Kirby Johnston and Jimmy Phillips were all out patrolling and checking for damage.

Jay Skinner of Birmingham is in the process of creating a 501(c) 3 non-profit to be the legal entity to apply for grants for the proposed Mentone multi-use arts/history/community events center. Four generations of Jay’s family have enjoyed coming to Mentone.

Clean-up day for Mentone will be Saturday April 5. Volunteers should meet Lyle Nicely at the parking lot of the Mentone Inn at 9:00 AM. Electronic recycling will take place at town hall.

From The Editor

Well, February was an eventful month, wasn’t it? With icy roads, 10-12 inches of snow, and bitterly cold temperatures, things have been pretty quiet in Mentone. We can hardly wait for spring, and thankfully it will make its official appearance this month. Let’s hope we have an uneventful spring season!

Our annual Rhododendron Festival is coming up quickly. The 2014 festival committee has already begun meeting weekly to organize and plan this year’s event. As always, we need all the help we can get! Join us Wednesdays at 1:00 PM at Kamama to see how you can get involved. Volunteers are needed before, during and after the festival.

If you’re interested in reserving a festival booth for your handmade arts & crafts, you’ll find an exhibitor application in this issue of The Groundhog. Applications will also be available online at www.mapamentone.com, and on several Facebook pages: “Mentone Alabama Festivals”, “Mentone Area Tourist Information”, “Mentone Area Preservation Association”, and “The Groundhog.”

Do you have an idea for an article in the Groundhog? Feel free to contact us. We cannot guarantee to publish everything that is submitted to us, but we’d love to hear your ideas. Remember that the deadline for submissions is the 20th of each month.

Rhododendron Festival Plans Underway

By Ray Padgett

Tired of the snow and ice – think Rhododendrons in full bloom. That vision carried us through our first Rhododendron Festival planning session. The usual suspects and some new volunteers met to identify jobs and assign responsibilities for this year’s big event. As it has been for the past 30 plus years, Mentone's Rhododendron Festival, sponsored by the Mentone Area Preservation Association (MAPA), is planned for the third weekend in May, with music and “dinner on the ground” on Friday and Saturday evenings.

Working Committees resulting from the meeting are:

• Exhibitor Coordination – Doreen Waters agreed to contact potential arts and crafts exhibitors, collect applications and track participants.

• Site Planning & Exhibitor Set-up – Once again, Beverly Bates agreed to assign all festival spaces, develop an events and exhibitor festival map and with the help of Elaine and Jack Gauldin coordinate exhibitor set-up.

• Entertainment – As she did for Colorfest, Lisa Crow will arrange for local musicians to perform during the festival.

• Festival Marketing – Kayla Worthey agreed to head our festival marketing effort. As in the past, this will include press releases, story solicitation, public service announcements, social media and signage. Rick and Debra Fey, Robert Moehr and Scott Thomas agreed to help.

• Taste of Mentone – Thomas Qualls agreed to coordinate our Mentone “Chefs” in this popular part of our festival.

• Festival Sponsors – Elaine Gauldin agreed to assemble a Sponsor Benefits Package and coordinate our sponsor solicitation efforts.

• Parking and Clean-up – As has happened over the past 25 or more years, our local Boy Scout troop, headed by David Gilbreath, agreed to clean up the festival site, park cars, build bonfires and clean up after the festival. THANK YOU SCOUTS!

• Doreen Waters, our MAPA Treasurer, will handle financial/accounting tasks for the festival.

THANK YOU SCOUTS!

dismay, she keeps painting on all their dinner plates in the kitchen.

Andrea says one of the lessons she has learned being an artist is to be frugal. She says she is grateful for her life and “if I were rich I may not work as hard.” Without one moment of feeling sorry for herself, Andrea has really been working hard by necessity because in 2013 Terry had a heart attack and she lost her son Richard Chadwick “Chad” Worthey in a car accident. It was a tough time for her but God’s gift of art helped her through the recent most trying moments of her life.

Andrea’s hope for the future is certainly to paint until the day she dies and continue to get better and better. She believes she will never stop growing as an artist and wants for people to feel like they could walk right into one of her paintings. She would also like to start teaching again. Plans are underway for a luncheon workshop with Andrea Brandon where you can create your own style of art using some of Andrea’s techniques and inspiration. Information will be available soon in The Groundhog and at the Wildflower Café where you can find Andrea’s art for sale and on display.

Winter Storm Pax

Winter storm Pax raged through the south the week of February 10th, bringing the potential for catastrophic storm conditions including snow, ice, and chaos to the area. Tuesday brought reports of 6”-8” of snow that blanketed the mountain in beautiful white winter wonderland. Along with that came Alabama Department of Transportation (AL DOT) de-icing trucks and crews and brought out our local volunteers, the North Lookout Mountain Fire Protection District (NLMFPD). Wednesday brought freezing rain, a half-inch of ice and Sand Mountain Electric Co-op (SMEC) trucks and crews. SMEC kept crews on-site in Mentone in preparation for the freezing rain that was beginning to build up on the power lines.

Thursday was a repeat of Tuesday with another 6”-8” inches of blinding white snow! I think everyone was singing, “Do you want to build a snowman?” (Do you know Olaf from the Disney movie Frozen?) I saw small Olaf-looking snowmen, snow forts, igloos, 10’ snowmen and everything in between. And as we all know, with all of the fun and beauty winter storms like this usually bring, they also bring just as many complications and issues like school closings, impassible roads, power outages, fallen trees, accidents and more.

While we did face some of those obstacles in our area, I would say that we fared pretty well overall; and we have our local police departments, AL DOT, SMEC and NLMFPD to thank for some of that! We would like to say THANK YOU to AL DOT for their quick response time in treating the roads and combating the ice, saving us from additional accidents. THANK YOU to SMEC employees for preparing for the worst and being on high alert. They were able to quickly respond to the minimal power outages that we did have and clear them in record times. THANKS to our local police departments for patrolling all hours of the storm, directing traffic and heedings warnings of poor driving conditions. We would also like to acknowledge our local VOLUNTEER fire department for all of their hard work and long hours they dedicated to this storm. They assisted our local police departments, SMEC crews, AL DOT crews, removed downed trees and still fought fires in between. Please take a moment to say THANK YOU to these volunteers if you see them around town. Or, you can say thank you by making a donation to the NLMFPD. You can mail your donation to P.O. Box 154, Mentone, AL 35984.

2013 Fireman of the Year

Congratulations to James Rhodes, Jr. of the North Lookout Mountain Fire Protection District (NLMFPD) for receiving 2013 Fireman of the Year Award. James has been a resident of Mentone for the past 10 years and decided to join the fire department 6 years ago to give back to the community and also saw it as a way to get to know his neighbors. James says, “I really enjoy working with these guys. They encourage me, and I appreciate everything they have done for me.” He also says that he appreciates this award and wants to thank his fellow firemen for honoring him with this achievement. He encourages each of them to strive to achieve this goal themselves.

This award was created by current Fire Chief Joseph Lee and Assistant Chief Toby Manifold as an incentive and motivator for these hardworking volunteers and also to show appreciation from the department. This is the third consecutive year the award has been given and is decided by a vote of the department each year. 2012 Fireman of the Year Kaleb McMunn presented James with his hard-earned award. Congratulations Mr. Rhodes!

Affordable Health Care Helps Local Residents

By Jan Newhoff

When my friends Margaret Baker, Toni McGriff and I became volunteer certified Navigators for the Affordable Care Act, I had no idea how gratifying the work would be. Our experiences have included some extremely inspiring results. It has been fun to watch many, who doubted the efficacy of the Affordable Care Act, singing its praises after enrolling for insurance. Here are a few examples:

The first woman I met was 60, on a widow’s pension, and had never had health insurance. With her subsidy, her insurance cost $21/month. A poultry farmer and his wife had been informed that their private insurance policies would cost them $840/month in 2014. With the Affordable Care Act, they now have insurance for the two of them at $275/month. A 28-year-old plumber could not afford private insurance and now has insurance at $28/month. A city employee who lost her insurance six years ago when she was cut to part-time work now pays $128/month for her policy. A father with two children got insurance for $261/month for the three of them. A woman, whose son and husband already have insurance, got insurance for herself for $11/month.

Most of these people either have never had insurance or have not had it in many years. When people have no health insurance, it affects the quality of their lives and their family’s lives as well. Many children are covered through ALLKIDS, the state Medicaid program for children, but their parents have no insurance. The Affordable Care Act makes insurance affordable for almost everyone who wants it. However, not every story has a happy ending.

Because the state of Alabama has not accepted the Medicare expansion that would give our poorest citizens free insurance, some Alabamians are being given no options for affordable insurance. Consumers must make a minimum amount of money in order to be eligible for subsidies. Telling people they do not qualify is a sad part of this work. Fortunately, these people will not be penalized.

A misconception is that the insurance is substandard. In truth, it is a very good Blue Cross Blue Shield policy. The subsidy comes from the government, but the insurance is private. All information shared is completely confidential.

The Affordable Care Act is for anyone that is not already receiving government-subsidized health care such as Medicare.

We expect to be very busy as the March 31 deadline for 2014 insurance nears. Many people call to ask questions; but, if they need assistance enrolling, we meet with them personally to help them enroll.

For assistance, call 256-674-3145 or email pwnanavigators@gmail.com.
Changing Moods -- Fifty Years in Black & White

By John Dersham

Over the last 50 years I have traveled the back roads of America photographically documenting beautiful scenery and carefully preserving on film the look and feel of Americana as can only be found on the roads less traveled. I use large format 4x5 and 8x10 cameras and film. Film in these sizes are capable of documenting detail, tonality, contrast and mood like no other medium in smaller film or digital. The subtle nuances of a scene come alive as if you are standing in the scene.

My exhibit, “Changing Moods-Fifty Y ears in Black & White” is currently on display at the Evelyn Burrow Museum in Hanceville/ Cullman, AL. There are 60 framed prints in this exhibit covering a variety of subject matter shot over these many years from coast to coast. All prints in the exhibit are from medium and large format film and all processed and printed in my darkrooms over the years. There are no color pictures and there are no digital images in this exhibit, despite the fact that I shoot a lot of those too.

To accompany this exhibit, I will be presenting a lecture series with an accompanying PowerPoint presentation of this work at photo workshops and seminars scheduled for this spring and summer in Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee.

You can help me continue my project to document an era of time that is passing away. I am interested in continuing my efforts to photograph people and places that are historical in nature, that carry the ambience of former generations. They have a story to tell that needs to be documented on 8x10 film before it fades away into history. You know the places I am talking about. If you know of historic locations with people who have possibly owned these places for generations please contact me to discuss the potential of setting up a time to photograph this valuable part of our past.

For information about my upcoming presentations or if you have a photo op idea please send me an email at jdersham@ mindspring.com.

Remember When...

You read in the March 1984 issue of the Groundhog:

Mentone’s 100th Birthday Celebration Proclaimed By Mayor And Town Council

With unanimous consent of the Town Council at it’s February meeting, Mayor Rob Hammond pronounced 1984 as the year of the Centennial of the Town of Mentone, suggesting that all local organizations take part in commemorating in various observances the 100th anniversary of the founding of the community. A steering committee is being appointed by the mayor which will begin plans for coordinating the event.

Suggestion for the celebration resulted from conversations between the editor of THE GROUNDHOG and Sandra Padgett concerning the recent acceptance of the Mentone Springs Hotel on the National Historic Register. When Sandra mentioned that the 100th anniversary of the building was forthcoming, the editor checked available historical sources. The historians generally conclude that both the laying out of the town and the building of the hotel occurred in 1884.

A memo was sent to the mayor and the leaders of local organizations requesting that the Mayor and Town Council declare 1984 the Year of Centennial.

I personally was just beginning the 7th grade that year and really don't remember a lot about that event, but I know how proud it makes me now. I was born and raised here, and I would never want to be anywhere else! I would like to say Happy 130th Birthday Mentone!

THE RECIPE CORNER
BY ANGIE CARDEN

Slow Cooker Guinness Stew

This recipe is for a slow cooker. If you don’t have one or would prefer to make the stew in the oven, just cook everything in a large Dutch oven and after you add the liquid, bring it to a simmer on the stovetop, tightly cover and then put it in a 225°F oven for 6 hours (or a 300°F oven for 4 hours).

In a large skillet, heat 2 Tbsp butter in a large sauté pan over medium-high heat. Brown 2 pounds cubed chuck beef roast in the butter, starting with the fattiest pieces of meat, fat side down in the pan. This will allow fat to render out. Work in batches so not to crowd the pan. Sprinkle salt over the beef as it browns.

Once browned on all sides, transfer the beef pieces into the slow cooker. Add 2 cups chopped onion and 2 celery stalks, chopped to the pan in which you just browned the beef. Sauté the onions and celery until they begin to brown at the edges, about 5 minutes. Add 2 Tbsp tomato paste and mix well. Cook for a minute or two, then add a little bit of a 1 pint (16 ounces) Guinness stout, enough to make it easier for you to scrape up any browned bits at the bottom of the pan. Transfer the celery and onions into the slow cooker.

Add the rest of the Guinness and 3 cups beef broth, 2 large carrots, peeled and cut into chunks, 2-3 parsnips, peeled and cut into chunks, 1 pound young turnips, peeled and cut into chunks, 2 teaspoons dried thyme and 2 teaspoons of salt. Cover and cook on “high” for 4 hours, or “low” for 8 hours. When done, add more salt to taste and sprinkle with fresh parsley (optional) to serve.

In Remembrance

Fred Timothy Castleberry (12/22/1990 – 03/28/2012)

Dear Fred,

It's already been two years...

I thought of you today, but that is nothing new. I thought about you yesterday and every day before that too.

My heart aches when I think of you, a piece of it is gone. And tears still fall at times when I quietly speak your name.

I know you're with God the Father and His loving Son. For you there is no time...

It's already been two years...

So very much.

The Paradise Garden Foundation (PGF) will host a reception at the Paradise Garden Visitor Center on March 7, 2014 (Friday) from 6 P.M. till 8 P.M. to welcome in the state art collection titles Inspired Georgia. This reception, free to the public will spotlight the newest exhibition and the state’s first traveling art exhibit. Featuring 28 pieces from Georgia’s state art collection, the exhibit is sponsored by the Georgia Council for the Arts in partnership with the Georgia Department of Economic Development’s Tourism Division and the Georgia Humanities Council.

“I am thrilled about this exhibition. I as a native of this county can admit real pride in saying that another local of the county, Howard Finster, is being exhibited with the top talents of the state art collection and we are able to host the collection here in Chattooga county,” says C. Sutton Connelly, President of the PGF Board of Directors.

About the Exhibition

“The traveling exhibit is an opportunity to use the state art collection as a springboard for additional arts and culture activities that serve to celebrate and increase awareness for the local cultural community and to increase tourism,” said Deal. “Sandra and I hope that this collection will inspire visitors and local citizens to learn more about Georgia’s artistic heritage and current artists, and to Explore Georgia.”

The state art collection, owned and managed by the Georgia Council for the Arts, is an extensive, vibrant chronicle of work created by Georgia artists from the 1970s to the 1990s. The new exhibit, “Inspired Georgia: 28 Works from Georgia’s State Art Collection,” is the first of its kind in decades, and highlights the diversity of styles, media and techniques in the collection. Original works from some of Georgia’s iconic artists including Benny Andrews, Lucinda Bunnen, Herbert Creecy, Howard Finster, Ruth Laxson and Nellie Mae Rowe are featured in the exhibit.

More about the Garden

Paradise Garden Located in Summerville, Georgia, is a maze of buildings, sculptures and displays. The Gardens were built from found objects and recycled materials ranging from bottles, bathtubs and toilets to bicycle frames and cast-off jewelry. The setting is a two-acre swampland that is drained by numerous canals. The PGF has been working for the past two years to revive the Garden with restoration, preservation and community activities. This year the Foundation will host the Man of Vision Kickoff Show (May 30th) and Finster Fest (May 31st and June 1st).

About the Paradise Garden Foundation

The mission of PGF is to preserve, maintain and showcase Rev. Howard Finster’s visionary artistic site, Paradise Garden. The Foundation’s primary goal is to serve as a social, cultural, educational and artistic nexus for the benefit of Chattooga County and the Northwest Georgia region. As such, PGF will foster regional economic development via tourism, public service and creative enterprise, each of which adheres to Finster’s vision for his garden.

The Paradise Garden Foundation is actively working to restore Paradise Garden and to promote area tourism. If you would like to learn more about the restoration of Paradise Garden, you can contact PGF Executive Director Jordan H. Poole at (706) 808-0800 or email jpoole@paradisegardenfoundation.org or visit www.Paradisegardenfoundation.org.
Sage Advice - Plants For Spring

Officially, Spring does not arrive until March, 20. Yet, we are having spring-like weather right now. We call the warm days ‘teaser’ days. However, winter is probably not yet over. Yes, put out those cool weather vegetables, but please hold off on the warm season veggies, and PLEASE, unless you have some of that very hard to find extra money these days, wait to put out the summer annuals. If you don’t mind buying more, go ahead; but I think you can spend your time and money right now planting shrubs, trees and perennial flowers (those that come back year after year).

For a new tree, I would suggest one of the very pretty maples. The Amur Maple (Acer genala) grows to about 35-40 feet tall and presents a spectacular fall show of orange, red, and yellow. It is good for a small front yard, providing shade but not overtaking the space. Most of us are familiar with the “normal” maples - the red, silver and sugar. The Amur maple is, to me, a step above the others and would truly grace your landscape. They can be difficult to locate at the big box stores, so talk to your local garden center. They may be able to special order it for you. And, it is not a very expensive tree—it will probably run about the same as the new red maples.

For a new shrub, try an old favorite. An evergreen, the Japanese Aucuba will live for many, many years. You can see these around older homes. My mother had about six or eight on the backyard side of her home, and they really were quite nice. You can let them grow for a few years, but will probably want to trim them back after some time. Some can get over ten feet tall, but with some pruning, they do very well under high windows and along a perimeter border. They bush from the ground to provide privacy. They will produce some new plants to give to friends. If you have the space, plant some lower growing shrubs or perennials in front of them. They do well in morning sun and afternoon dappled shade. The heat of the summer afternoon sun can cause leaf scorch, so I suggest planting them where they can get some afternoon shade. They can tolerate dry conditions and, once established, can go awhile without water. Do water them regularly, though, when you plant them to encourage good growth.

For a new perennial, plant one of the colorful echinaceas (coneflower). The purple coneflower has been around for ages but new colors have been propagated and now come in yellow, red, orange, white, pink, even green! Some are tall (to 36”) while others are shorter (12” to 24”). They are very hardy in our zone, tolerating drought and heat. Plant the tall ones at the back of the perennial or annual bed and the shorter ones in the middle of the bed. You can depend on them to return year after year. They will produce some new plants but are not invasive.

Now is the time to also divide some perennials, especially the hostas and daylilies. Dig up a clump with lots of soil around the roots. Using a sharp shovel or garden fork, divide the bunch into several clumps. Do not pull apart each bulb or plant. Keep them in groups of three to four or more and replant in good organic soil. Water them thoroughly after planting and regularly (every three days or so if there is no rain). They should just keep on going without wilting.

Mountain Fog

Hey neighbor! How are you doing? I'm DeSoto Red. I'm going to be telling you a few things every now and then about what's on my mind. When they convinced me to talk to you folks from time to time, that Groundhog bunch didn't know what they were getting into!

One thing about Mentone is that you can be yourself. You can relax. You can drop your rat race survival skills. You don't have to be "just another one of the sheep" to fit in. We tend to practice "live and let live" around here. For that reason, you can find some of the most interesting, real people you would ever want to meet right here in Mentone.

For some it's a process of slowly letting go. Others almost instantly drop the defensive tactics they employ to survive in their corporate life. Either way, there are a lot of unique self-thinkers walking the streets of Mentone!

When the metamorphosis is complete, some are so elated with the "new them", the "real them", that they give themselves a new name. Their "Mentone name" is usually accepted by one and all. That's right neighbor, old uptight John P. Bigboss is transformed into "River Dawg" or "Johnny Thunder"!

I think it's about time you had a Mentone name. My purpose in being here today is to help you discover just what that new name will be. I know you want one!

All you have to do is find the month you were born in for your first name and the first letter of your old last name to find your new last name. If you don't like it, just pick what you want! Heck, this is Mentone neighbor! I'll see you next time.

Mountain Herbalist: Pocket of Wildflowers

By L. C. Moon

At the base of Lookout Mountain there is a paradise abundant with Lookout’s native wildflowers-the Pocket. It is called the Pocket because it is a “holler” that holds within itself huge concentrations of native plants and trees. Each spring in the month of March I journey down the mountain to experience the joy of surrounding myself with all of the bountiful blooms. I would like to share some of the blooms my friends and I admired on March 23, 2009 plus share a general overview of some of their uses.

Bloodroot is one of the first woodland flowers to bloom in spring. Its bud pops up out of the ground with one single leaf wrapping itself around the stem. As the bloom opens the leaf begins to open also. When the bloom loses its petals the leaf fully opens showing its unique shape. Bloodroot is known most for its use as a red dye. It is also known for skin ailments.

Hepatica was in full glory. Some of them were bloomed out though the contrasting colors of the leaves make it beautiful to enjoy year round. Folk herbalists and American Indians used hepatica for liver ailments. It can also be used for childbirth.

Trout lily has a beautiful leaf also. Its texture used hepatica for liver ailments. It can also be round. Folk herbalists and American Indians on the leaves make it beautiful to enjoy year were bloomed out though the contrasting colors Hepatica was in full glory. Some of them red dye. It is also known for skin ailments.

Its petals the leaf fully opens showing its unique leaf begins to open also. When the bloom loses it itself around the stem. As the bloom opens the flower with a drooping bell-shaped flower that is salmon colored at the base then transitions into a yellowish color. The bloom always reminds me of a perfect fairy skirt. There is a beautiful specimen of columbine at the pocket sitting so pretty on a rock by the creek with moss and walking fern surrounding it. The root of columbine is known to be good for stomach troubles and to stop uterine bleeding. However columbine is potentially poisonous.

The root of columbine is known to be good for stomach troubles and to stop uterine bleeding. However columbine is potentially poisonous.

Star chickweed can be used like all other chickweeds. Chickweed is good for nutrition, allergies, coughs, colds, as a diuretic and the list goes on.

There are lots of different types of violets at the pocket and on Lookout. All types of violets are edible. The root of violets can be poulticed for boils and skin afflictions.

There are also many types of trillium. The most commonly used trillium is bethroot also known as red trillium. It is known to be good for female disorders. Bethroot is particularly used for childbirth.

Celandine Poppy has a pretty yellow flower. The root of the plant can be used for the liver and spleen.

Jack in the Pulpit was just about to open its cup like bloom that has a flap and in the center of the cup you find jack standing erect. The root of Jack-in-the-pulpit can be used for cough and colds, bronchitis and asthma.

Solomon’s seal and false solomon’s seal look very similar however false solomon’s seal has a cluster of white blooms that bloom from the top of the plant whereas the solomon’s seal blooms come out at the base of the leaves going down a single stalk. The root of solomon’s seal can be used for lung ailments. False solomon’s seal root can be used as a stomach tonic and for rashes.

Toothwort leaves are highly toothed. It is a sweet little plant that has white blooms that are very showy. The root can be used for toothaches and throat ailments including hoarseness.

White Baneberry is also known as doll’s eyes because its white blooms turn into white fruits with black spots that look like doll eyeballs. The root can be used for pain of childbirth, circulation and colds—though it can cause gastrointestinal irritation.

Bellwort has a drooping yellow flower that is often hid under its drooping leaves. It is quite prevalent at the pocket. The root tea can be used for health of the mouth, throat and gums.

Redbud trees are bursting with color. Red bud flowers are edible and the inner bark is a folk cancer remedy for leukemia.

There are many more details that can be covered about the glory of all of these beauties. After the cold winter, it is such a blessing to witness God’s treasure abounding so plentiful and beautiful. My mind, body and soul are always fed each spring. I certainly hope yours is as well.

It is wise for me to tell you to consult your healthcare provider before altering your healthcare regimen with the above herbs. Hope you are able to find many of the beautiful native flowers this spring! Happy Hunting!
Menlo Notes - Quilting Heritage

Why I love quilts is simple enough. It’s ingrained in my DNA, passed on by generations of grandmothers, my mother, my aunt and my sister. They were all quilters, and the talent, with much prodding and instruction, was finally adopted into my creative agenda. I still have a lot to learn, and the stitching is far from perfect, but that will never deter me from diving into a project that may or may not be completed.

My mother’s quilting frame hung from the living room ceiling. It was a handmade one that could be lifted up when not in use, and lowered just to the right height when she was working. It’s wooden slats were rubbed smooth to eliminate splinters that would surely snag the material or to keep little fingers from being hurt. The frame was probably made by my Granddaddy Ward Smith and inherited from Grandmother Jenny.

One of my favorite memories is of time spent playing beneath the shelter of this old frame while the radio played and mother hummed along with the music, her nimble fingers guiding the needle across the fabric. Some days my Aunt Viola came to visit, and they shared laughter and stories. Caught up in their conversations, they forgot I was underneath, and tiny ears sometimes heard things they should not have heard. I kept their secrets, always being quiet, content and happy. Many times I’ve wondered about the whereabouts of this old rack. Where did it go? Another mystery of life.

During my childhood, I made doll quilts out of the scraps my mother shared with me. My sister Ruth made lots of doll clothes for us. There is always a use for scraps. Mother liked bright material, and the dancing colors became beautiful pictures. Wrapped in their warmth, I would rub my fingers across the texture and dream of wonderful things.

Each quilt tells a story if you look close enough. The patterns--dark, light, medium--all melt into an artful treasure. Treasure I do, because I am lucky to still have a mother and grandmother quilt in my possession. They are lovingly displayed on a shelf in my small living room.

Because I love quilts, the upcoming show in Menlo is a project from the heart; and if you have a treasured piece tucked away somewhere, get it out and join us for a day of loving the past and looking with hope to the future of quilting.

The Menlo Spring Quilt Show will be held on March 15 at the Lawrence Center on Edison Street. There will be two categories--Hand Quilted and Machine Quilted. Ribbons and prizes will be awarded for 1st and 2nd place entries. There will also be refreshments, quilt demonstrations by Ellen Harris, a country store and vintage displays. The deadline for all entries is March 14. For information, contact Diane at 256-294-3663 or Glenda at 706-862-2240.

The Cracker Line That Saved An Army

During the Late Unpleasantness (known more popularly as the American Civil War), Mentone fortunately avoided the fighting that ravaged so many other areas in the south. But Chattanooga, Tennessee, just 45 miles up Lookout Valley, was a miserable place to be. In the Fall of 1863, forty-five thousand defeated and demoralized Union soldiers under the Command of General William Rosecrans had retreated into the very trenches from which they had chased their Confederate enemies just a few weeks before. Now, after suffering a stunning defeat by the Confederate Army of Tennessee at the Battle of Chickamauga in mid-September, the boys in blue were back in their Chattanooga trenches, cold and very, very hungry. Staring down at them from the top of Lookout Mountain and the sides of Missionary Ridge were 70,000 equally demoralized southern troops under the command of the mostly inept, and highly unpopular, General Braxton Bragg. All in all, it was a study in misery. Something had to give.

That late September and early October of '63, Chattanooga looked very much like a trap to the Union soldiers who were pinned down and forced to live under siege conditions. For a week the Confederate artillery located on top of Lookout fired a near constant blast of shot and shell on the huddled Yankees below. Although almost no one was hit, nerves were rattled and morale took another plunge. The southerners also suffered since they were rarely able to get any sleep themselves because of all the noise they were making. Then, beginning October 1st, it rained for 19 of the next 53 days. And it got cold. One writer estimated that by the time the siege was over, there were a mere 50 trees still standing in the whole city. The rest had all been cut down for firewood or to build fortifications.

Then there was the lack of food. Almost from the beginning of Bragg's siege, the northern troops went on half rations; soon they were reduced to quarter rations. Spirits dropped as Union troops were reduced to following behind supply wagons and picking up fallen corn kernels intended for their horses and mules. General Rosecrans seemed paralyzed with inaction. President Abraham Lincoln described him as seeming to be “stunned. Like a duck hit on the head.” A change in leadership was needed, and General Ulysses Grant, the hero of Vicksburg the summer before, was brought to town to get things going.

The southern troops were starving too, and were much more poorly clothed and equipped than their northern foes. Food was being stored in large quantities just 4 miles away, but General Bragg was hoarding it for some reason. At this point in the siege, southern troops were being issued 3 hard tack crackers and 2 tablespoons of sugar a day. Sam Watkins, the diarist who wrote such a stirring and readable account of his years in the Confederate Army, said, “The soldiers were starved and almost naked, and covered all over with lice and camp itch and filth and dirt. We thought of nothing but starvation.” Morale was so low that desertions from the southern army became epidemic. In September and October, almost 2,250 rebels lit out, never to return.

The motivation for the northern troops to get up and run the rebs out of town boiled down to their empty stomachs. As the noose around Chattanooga was tightening in October, resupplying the union forces there got increasingly more difficult. The federal supply base at Bridgeport, Alabama, was a mere 30 miles away as the crow flies. But crows do not deliver supplies. The Confederates held Lookout Valley, the mountains to the south, east, and west of the city, and lined the banks of the Tennessee River. The only way to get food and other supplies to the bottled up yanks was to bring it over a 60-mile twisting, washed out pig trot of a road that ran up and down the ridges to the northwest of the city. Even that route wasn't always dependable. A raid by Confederate cavalry under General Joe Wheeler resulted in the loss of more than 300 Yankee wagons full of supplies. John Rawlins, Grant's chief of staff, described the route as “the roughest and steepest of ascent and descent ever crossed by army wagons and mules.” Dead mules literally lined the entire route. Those mules that survived had to be fed almost as much animal feed as they were able to pull to the city. Something had to be done. For the Union troops, it was all about crackers.

When Grant arrived to replace Rosecrans in late October he heard a plan devised by General William F. “Baldy” Smith. It called for a night time amphibious landing at Browns Ferry, located on the Tennessee at the base of the northern end of Lookout, at the head of Lookout Valley. The United States had not conducted a major amphibious landing since the war with Mexico 15 years earlier. But Grant was impressed both with the plan and with the urgency of doing something dramatic to get food and supplies into Chattanooga for his famished men.

On the night of October 26/27, a total of about 1,600 Union troops under the command of General William B. Hazen loaded onto 52 hastily built flat bottomed boats and began the nine-mile drift down river to Brown's Ferry. Surprise was their main concern, so they remained silent for the whole trip. An additional force under General John Turchin, a Russian immigrant, would march across Moccasin Point, be picked up by the now empty landing craft, and paddle across to join Hazen. Five thousand yankees were about to descend on fewer than 200 clueless Confederates.

Browns Ferry was not the Confederate army's greatest moment. Though aware of the buildup of yankees across the river on Moccasin Point, the southern troops at Browns Ferry received no reinforcements from their commanders who were convinced the yanks would come at their mountain top fortifications by way of roads on top of the mountain running up from the area above Trenton, Georgia. Confronted by overwhelmingly superior numbers, the rebels initially drove the Union attackers almost back into the river. Union engineers were frantically constructing a pontoon bridge across the river from Moccasin Point to the Ferry. By 4:30 AM it was finished, and yankee reinforcements poured across. The Confederates were pushed back, and Browns Ferry was firmly in Union hands.

The federals lost only 21 men in the landing and subsequent nighttime firefight. The way was now cleared for a steady stream of supplies to reach the city. On the morning of October 30, 40,000 desperately needed rations arrived on the newly built steamboat Chattanooga. The starving time was over, at least for the federals. The Cracker Line, as the new supply route was dubbed, was in business.

The newly invigorated Union Army quickly got down to business. At a rare night time battle at Wauhatchee on October 28, General Joseph Hooker’s federals managed to smash Confederate forces. Then, in the famous Battle above the Clouds in late November, his forces scrambled up the steep sides of the end of Lookout and chased off the Confederates on top. A day later Grant assaulted Missionary Ridge to the east of Chattanooga and pushed Bragg’s forces out of Tennessee and into northern Georgia. The siege was over.

Though it’s been 150 years since the guns fell silent, it’s an easy day trip to visit Chattanooga and the scene of the three major battles fought there: Lookout Mountain, Chicamauga and Missionary Ridge. No need to take crackers.
